SUBJECT: NEW CAR COALITION GOVERNMENT - NOTHING NEW, AND NOT A COALITION

¶1. (SBU) SUMMARY: The announcement on Monday, January 19, of a new coalition government ended the several weeks of delay in naming the new coalition recommended by December's Inclusive Political Dialogue. The new government, listed below, represents little change from the old and is even less inclusive. Prime Minister Faustin Archange Touadera remains in his position, though the number of members in the new Cabinet jumped from 29 to 32 and the most controversial Ministers such as the Minister of Mines remain in place. The new reshuffle will certainly not placate the political opposition, and it remains to be seen whether a couple token government positions will quell the northwest and northeast rebellions. END SUMMARY

THE FEW CHANGES

¶2. (SBU) The CARG agreed in December to a new consensus government, to be created from all of the Dialogue's participants, including the various rebel groupings and political opposition. Nonetheless, the President delayed in naming a new Prime Minister for several weeks, mired in difficult negotiations with the UFVN opposition coalition. The new government, listed below, is not inclusive of all participants and represents little change from the old. Prime Minister Faustin Archange Touadera remains in his position, though the number of members in the new Cabinet jumped from 29 to 32, with one promotion for then-Minister of Communications Cyriaque Gonda to the title of Minister of State for Communications. The other Ministers of State, including notoriously corrupt Minister of Mines Sylvain Ndoutingai, remain in their positions, while several other Ministers were shuffled to different portfolios. Former Minister for Foreign Affairs Dieudonne Kombo-Yaya was dropped and replaced by CAR General Antoine Gambi whose previous duties included overseeing the Security Sector reform process, a position he carried out with mediocre reviews from international partners. Justice Minister Thierry Maleyombo lost his position, and was replaced by the former Secretary-General of the Presidency Laurent Ngon-Baba.

The President's cousin and previous Water and Forests Minister lost her position, and was replaced by former Finance Minister Emmanuel Bizot.

THE UNKNOWNS

¶3. (SBU) Nonetheless, the few departures underline the lack of change in this government, and the few appointments of outsiders and rebel-associated Ministers call into question the coherence of the CARG. The unknown APRD-affiliated Francois Naoyama was selected as Minister for the Environment and Ecology, a much less powerful and redundant Ministry in comparison with that of Water and Forests. Another relative unknown, Mr. Djollo-Djidou of Abacar Sabone's rebel group MLJC, was named as Minister of Housing and Habitats, while the only member of the political opposition on the list, Mr. Andre Nalke-Dorogo of the opposition Movement for the Liberation of the Central African People (MLPC), was not notified of his impending selection and resigned his new position as Minister of Health on January 21 under pressure from his party. That President Bozize would not notify his nominee for Minister of Health of the impending announcement indicates a random selection process, as well as a paltry qualifications scheme for these positions.

NOTHING NEW, AND POSSIBLY WORSE

¶4. (SBU) In short, little has changed in the CARG, and the new government so resembles the old that it hardly counts as anything new. It will certainly not placate the political opposition, though their general unwillingness to compromise and their preparations for the 2010 elections may lead them to accept the government for the moment in hopes of defeating it later at the ballot box. As for the rebel groups, a couple token government positions is unlikely to quell the northwest and northeast rebellions. At present, some rebel leaders are touring the northwest in hopes of convincing their troops to drop their arms. That said, recent fighting near Ndele may signal a return to the chaotic groupings and erratic low-scale warfare that has characterized northern CAR for the last five years.
